Randy Gibson is a composer, installation artist, performer, curator, and producer. His music has been described as “engag(ing) with rhythms and temporality existing outside of our socially-constructed rhythms, offering a glimpse of time outside of time.” (I Care If You Listen), “an hypnotic mass of slowly mutating sound” (Textura), “a booming, throbbing sine wave that filled the room” (New York Times), and “a gorgeously expansive dronescape” (Aquarius). Gibson grew up in Boulder, CO, where his interest in ritual and expansive night skies was initially developed. In 2001, Gibson moved to New York City and, since 2003, has studied with seminal Minimalist pioneers La Monte Young and Marian Zazeela. Gibson’s work has been presented around the world and has been commissioned by festivals, choreographers, record labels, ensembles, and individual musicians.
